October is National Estate Planning Awareness Month! Even with Halloween just around the corner, estate planning doesn't have to be scary. By putting a plan in place, you could sweep away the cobwebs of uncertainty and may leave behind something sweeter than candy — confidence for you and your loved ones.

Protection Today

For those still working, estate planning may center around protecting your family during the busiest years of life. A will could name guardians for your children. Beneficiary designations on retirement accounts and life insurance policies may help assets pass smoothly. Powers of attorney and healthcare directives may provide a plan if you're ever unable to make financial or medical decisions.

Legacy Tomorrow

For those in retirement, estate planning may be about legacy — passing on values, providing for loved ones, and ensuring your wishes are carried out with clarity. It can provide clear instructions for your heirs, may reduce administrative burdens, and could support your charitable goals. Reviewing existing documents with your estate attorney is important, especially if family circumstances or state laws have changed since they were prepared.

Common Benefits

No matter your stage of life, estate planning may help to:

- Spare your loved ones from confusion or conflict.
- Name a person to make your financial or healthcare decisions if you're unable to.
- Direct how your assets are handled, whether modest or substantial.
- Provide you with confidence today.

A Living Process

Estate planning is not "set it and forget it." As families grow, assets change, and laws evolve, your plan should be reviewed regularly and updated as needed.

Of course, not every tool is right for every household, and legal requirements vary. Estate planning should be tailored to your specific circumstances.

This year, make it a priority to review your estate plan with your attorney — or to create one if you've been putting it off. Having a clear plan in place is one of the most meaningful gifts you can give to yourself and your loved ones.
